

“For me [the CFI] is one way of what I could call giving away psychology. We [as psychologists] are meant to publish, read the research, and reproduce the findings in our classrooms. My lab has been involved in investigations about this as it pertains to campus climate. If I can be someone who is helping to be disseminating this information and empowering the faculty to try a new skillset, or to talk about multicultural topics in a different way, it will help students’ comfort levels and trust. If I can give that to faculty and they can see the value of being more current - being vivid - any student will hopefully enjoy that class more.”

Matt Lee