

“As an undergrad, I was impressed that the Center for Faculty Innovation not only works with faculty, but has resources for training students to lead classroom discussions. When I started teaching as a faculty member, I remember sifting through some of the same resources so I could plan and construct my very first classroom from the ground up. It’s been really nice to be able to use some of CFI’s tools to facilitate class discussions that really get at student learning – rather than straight lecturing for the full time. So, I think my students would say that my classroom isn’t a traditional classroom, but in a good way.”
