

1. Your knowledge and understanding of the great diversity of ideas and world views developed through history to explain how the world works.

2. Your personal commitment and desire to become more widely read and/or knowledgeable about real world complex systems.

3. Confidence in your ability to read, comprehend and integrate a diversity of literature and complex ideas.

4. Your ability to see and argue points of view other than your own, and that you may even disagree with.

5. Confidence and competence in your intellectual skills.