STUDENT DEVELOPMENT NEWS

CONTINUING STUDENT SURVEY

Volume 29, Number 2

January 2007

STUDENT DEVELOPMENT NEWS is distributed to faculty and staff in an effort to share with the University community information obtained about James Madison University students. It is hoped that through the sharing of this information a better understanding will develop about the JMU student.

In late October and early November, 2006, staff in the Division of Student Affairs & University Planning distributed to students the Continuing Student Survey 2006, an instrument that requests responses from JMU students to questions about their perceptions and degree of satisfaction with JMU, their self-perceptions, and their attitudes, values, and beliefs. Demographic data were also collected.

With the support of the Provost and the academic deans, a representative sample of approximately 25 percent of the JMU undergraduate student body was selected. Six separate forms of the survey were developed with each student in the sample receiving one of the six forms. Through the cooperation of 56 faculty, Survey 2006 was administered during class time to 3739 students in a total of 124 sections. This issue of the STUDENT DEVELOPMENT NEWS reports on the data obtained from these respondents.

RESPONDENTS REPRESENTATIVE OF UNDERGRADUATE POPULATION AT JMU

Comparing information received from the respondents to data from the Office of Institutional Research, participants in Survey 2006 are representative of the JMU undergraduate population in the following areas: gender (Table 1), race (Table 3), JMU residence (Table 12), and permanent residence (Table 13).

STUDENTS, IN GENERAL, CONTINUE TO REPORT TRADITIONAL MIDDLE-CLASS BACKGROUNDS

More than three-fifths of the respondents report their annual family income is $100,000 or greater (Table 14). More than two-thirds of the students stated that their fathers earned at least one college degree (Table 15) and more than three-fifths of the respondents indicated that their mothers had earned at least one college degree (Table 16). Nearly three-fourths of the students reported they plan to obtain a degree beyond the baccalaureate (Table 11).

PHILOSOPHY OF HIGHER EDUCATION CONTINUES TO FOCUS ON VOCATIONAL ISSUES

More than one-half of the students in this year's survey stated their philosophy of higher education is based on a vocational philosophy where education is viewed essentially as preparation for an occupation (Table 18). Thirty percent of this year's respondents said their philosophy of higher education emphasizes social life and loyalty to college. Female respondents were more likely to prefer a vocational or artistic philosophy; men, a social philosophy.

PERCEPTIONS OF JMU REMAIN POSITIVE

Three-fourths or more of this year's respondents described JMU as being good, friendly, challenging, progressive, open and accessible, the right size and intellectual (Table 19). More than one-half of the respondents described JMU as supportive, sensitive, flexible, emotionally healthy, and integrated.

Students were also asked to indicate the areas where they felt JMU places significant emphasis (Table 20). More than two-thirds of this year's students said they feel JMU places a significant emphasis on the development of academic, scholarly, and intellectual qualities. Female respondents were more likely than men to describe JMU as placing an emphasis on relationships with other students, student groups and activities.

STUDENTS CONTINUE TO INDICATE THEY ARE VERY SATISFIED/SATISFIED WITH JMU IN GENERAL AND WITH THEIR PERSONAL EFFORTS

At least nine out of ten of this year's students said they are satisfied or very satisfied with the attractiveness of JMU campus landscaping; the cleanliness of buildings; the general condition of the buildings and grounds; JMU in general; the attitude of faculty towards students; functionality of electronic mail system, the recreation center, academic quality of classes; dining facilities and quality of food; functionality of e-campus; and personal security/safety at JMU (Table 23).

Respondents to this year's survey were also asked to indicate their level of agreement with statements concerning various areas of JMU (Table 24). More than three-fourths of the respondents agreed or strongly agreed with the following statements: faculty are knowledgeable in their field; methods of instruction and course content are related to course objectives; that the respondent is treated courteously by building and grounds; classrooms generally have adequate equipment; there is a clear understanding of course aims and requirements; that the respondent knows what to do to get an A, B, C, D or F in class; that methods of instruction are challenging and understandable; information needs are met using computers outside the library; admission and recruiting activities portray JMU accurately; and classrooms/laboratories generally have adequate heating and air conditioning; prompt, courteous service in dining facilities; and satisfaction with the JMU library.

For the past five years, respondents have been asked about their satisfaction with various aspects of the General Education program (Table 22). This year, as was true in past years, students reporting that they have earned 28 hours or less at JMU were significantly more satisfied about most aspects of General Education than other students, particularly the quality of advising.

More than three-fourths of the respondents are satisfied or very satisfied with the friendships they have made; the quality of their effort in class; their usage of the library; their informal discussions with faculty; their outside of class activities and their attendance at athletic events. Men were more likely to be satisfied or very satisfied with their attendance at athletic events (Table 21).

STUDENTS INDICATE THEIR PROBABLE REACTIONS TO DISCOVERING A STUDENT CHEATING

When asked how they would probably react to discovering a student at this university cheating, more than thirty percent of the respondents to this year's survey said they would be disturbed but would do nothing (Table 25). This percentage is consistent with previous years. Women were more likely than men to speak to the appropriate teacher or other authority without naming names and would be disturbed and do nothing. Men were more likely to report that they would not be disturbed and would do nothing. Students were also asked about their perceptions of the JMU honor code, honor system and academic misconduct. More than eight out of every ten respondents believe that the honor code and honor system have been clearly explained to them and understand what actions are considered to be academic misconduct (Table 26). When asked the number of times they knowingly engaged in academic misconduct at JMU nearly three-fourths of the respondents said “never” (Table 27).

ACCOMPLISHMENTS PERCEIVED BY STUDENTS AS BEING ESSENTIAL

More than three-fifths of the respondents in this year’s survey indicated they view raising a family as being an essential accomplishment (Table 28). More than one-fourth or more of the students stated the following accomplishments are essential: becoming an authority in one’s field; helping others who are in difficulty; receiving a liberal arts education that is of high quality and very diversified; developing a meaningful philosophy of life; obtaining recognition from my colleagues for contributions to my special field; being well off financially; promoting racial understanding; influencing social values; and being successful in a business of my own. Women were more likely to report that the following were essential; raising a family; helping others in difficulty; creating artistic works; becoming involved in programs to clean the environment; being admitted to a prestigious graduate school; receiving a high quality liberal arts education; and participating in a community action program. Men were more likely to report becoming an authority in my field; being successful in a business of my own; keeping up to date with political affairs and being accomplished in a varsity sport as essential. Students of color were more likely than white respondents to indicate the following as essential accomplishment: influencing the political structure; contributing to scientific theory; creating artistic works; and being admitted to a prestigious graduate school. Students in Visual and Performing Arts were more likely to report that the following were essential: becoming accomplished in one of the performing arts; Arts and Letters respondents - writing original works; creating artistic works; developing a meaningful philosophy of life; receiving a liberal arts education of high quality and promoting racial understanding. Business students were more likely to report becoming an authority in my field; obtaining recognition from colleagues in my field; having administrative responsibility for the work of others and being well off financially. ISAT and Science and Mathematics students were more likely to report that making a theoretical contribution to science and being admitted to a prestigious graduate school are essential.

JMU STUDENTS CONTINUE TO REFLECT TRADITIONAL VALUES

More than eight out of ten of the respondents said that friendship, education, family, and achieving my own identify are very important values (Table 29). Women were significantly more likely to value work, love, leading a clean moral life, having children, and doing things for others.

Students were also asked to characterize their political views (Table 17). Approximately forty percent of the respondents indicate a middle-of-the-road political preference; one-third liberal; and one-fourth conservative. Men were more likely to indicate they were conservative; women liberal.

ALCOHOL USAGE REPORTED BY STUDENTS

Students were asked to consider different ways in which their use of alcohol has affected their behavior (Table 37). More than one-third of the respondents answered that their use of alcohol has resulted in their behaving in ways they regretted; caused them to feel guilty and resulted in their not remembering a period of time. Men were significantly more likely than women to state the use of alcohol had resulted in more negative consequences. Students of color were less likely than other respondents to have suffered negative consequences and to have consumed alcohol.

Questions were also asked of respondents about how they would define high risk drinking for themselves (Table 39) and the degree to which they believed that alcohol consumption is a problem at JMU (Table 38). More than one half of the responding students defined high risk drinking as somewhere between six to eleven drinks in an evening. Nearly two fifths of the respondents believe that the consumption of alcohol is a minor problem at JMU. Significant differences exist between male and female respondents. Women were more likely to define high risk drinking as consuming fewer drinks than the men’s definition and more likely than men to perceive alcohol consumption as a major problem.

Respondents were asked to specifically consider their alcohol consumption over the previous two weeks. More than one half of the respondents answered that during the previous two weeks they had consumed five or more drinks in a row at least once (Table 42). Students of color and women were significantly less likely to indicate “frequent” alcohol consumption.

The following tables contain summaries of data collected (percentages in parentheses are from the 2005, 2004, and 2003 Continuing Student Surveys, when available).
