

HONOR ROLL of DONORS

A Christmas gift to remember

The story of JMU's first privately funded Centennial Scholarship

BY JAMES AND JULIE RILEY ('99P, '05P),
FORMER PARENTS COUNCIL CHAIRS

ON DEC. 22, 2006, I AWOKE AT 4:30 A.M. feeling as excited as a 6-year-old on Christmas morning. As my thinking cleared, I realized my thoughts were revolving around the scholarship Julie and I had endowed to JMU. How strange it felt to be excited about giving to a school neither one of us attended.

I began to think through how and why, because I wanted to answer questions others would ask. It is certain that all the donors listed in this Honor Roll of Donors have their own reasons and their own giving story. What follows is the story of how the Riley Family Centennial Scholarship came to be.

Special relationships

Relationships seem to be the most important things in life — how we love and support family, unconditionally accept friends, and treat and respect others. But, do I believe you can have a relationship with an institution? I think the answer is no, but I do believe you can have a relationship with those who work hard to uphold the institution's values and mission. Our relationships are with those who make JMU an amazing place to get an education and become an involved citizen.

In 1995 our daughter, Tara, decided to attend JMU. We wanted to see Tara regularly and meet her new friends, so we purchased football season tickets, and we knew that showing up for a tailgate with good food meant it wouldn't take long to meet them. Soon we had a sense for the quality of students and how happy they were to be at Madison.

It seems our first relationship with a JMU employee was with Lisa Horsch [former development officer]. She knew Tara and occasionally had lunch with Julie. Lisa came by our tailgates to say hello and invite me to play golf. She was doing her job — building a relationship — yet it never felt false, and we never discussed giving. Our "first JMU relationship" was positive.

When our son, Paul ('06), decided to attend JMU and become a Marching Royal Duke, the family went to the August Send-Off Picnic and met Pat and Glenda Rooney. Glenda invited us to join the Parents Council, which began a wonderful four-year relationship culminating in us chairing the council. Our relationships began to grow and flourish as we met administrators and staff members who spoke to the 90-member council.

Then Brooke Williams, the daughter of good friends and neighbors, married Justin Thompson who soon after became JMU's director of alumni relations. Naturally, we visited them.

At a going away party for Lisa Horsch, I overheard Justin say "You could make a generous contribution to some institutions with enormous endowments and it would hardly be noticed, or you could give that same money to JMU where it would really make a difference and be appreciated very much." That statement left a lasting impression on me and has played a part in our giving decisions.

Justin told Charles King, vice president for administration and finance, to call me about a medical problem that Charlie and I have in common. Now, Charlie and I share values and enthusiasm for JMU athletics and are good friends. His wife, Sherry, now director of JMU's Office of Parent Relations, works with the Parents Council and closely with us. Our pre-game tailgates wouldn't be the same without the Kings.

The Impact of Giving

As James Madison University's first century comes to an end and the Madison Century Capital Campaign races toward its June 30, 2008, finish, this special Honor Roll of Donors acknowledges those crucial to the success of both. Those listed here – alumni, parents, friends, employees, corporations, foundations and other organizations – have not only shown their financial support of JMU's mission, they have made a commitment to and an investment in Madison's second century. Let's consider for a moment the State Normal School that opened in 1908 and what those who brought it here might think if they were able to see JMU today. What kind of impact will today's supporters have on Madison's second century? We can only imagine.

Through the council, we have become friends with Joanne Carr, vice president of university advancement, and her husband, Mike Mann. We've enjoyed many dinners together that often involve discussions on how to better the university yet never a contribution request. Through the Kings, we've been privileged to know President Linwood Rose and his wife, Judith.

We enjoy these and other friendships and relationships that constitute our relationship with JMU. Relationships such as these are perceived as sincere, and the sense of being recognized and appreciated is a powerful factor in the desire to give — a fact people at JMU handle with class. It's the friendliness and sincerity of those who make up the university community that make this relationship special.

The ability to give

We have been blessed; we have a comfortable life. Thus, we are able to give. It becomes a question of how much, to whom, how and when. As my practice has been successful, we are able to be more generous in giving to the causes we support. After we raised, educated, married and provided for the future for our children, we turned to more profound questions. For instance, what money can I redirect from taxes, which would never benefit my children, to something I really care about.

The need to give

Two things I hope come with age are a sense of the phases of life and an awareness of mortality. I suppose everyone must ask questions like "What will I have accomplished with my life?" and "What have I done that will be remembered after my children and grandchildren are gone?" Giving creates a way to perpetuate something — for givers and recipients — that will be meaningful for years to come. I have wrestled with the need to do something for the underprivileged. What that should be was not clear beyond doing something to raise people up from life's circumstances.

Embracing a vision

One quality of a leader is an ability to create a vision that those they lead will embrace and be energized in accomplishing. I am confident President Rose will be regarded as a great leader for his ability to share his vision for JMU.

Several times Julie and I listened intently as he shared his initiative for increasing diversity by establishing Centennial Scholarships and as he spoke of the Madison Century Campaign goal to raise $4 million to endow student scholarships. Then, at the Scholarship Luncheon in March, we expressed our interest in starting a dialogue to explore possible giving opportunities. After thoughtful consideration, advice from my trusted friend and accountant Bill Gregg, and a sense that "this felt right," we signed the papers on Dec. 17 to acknowledge our intent to make the most significant gift we have ever given.

The Riley Family Centennial Scholarship

The first privately funded Centennial Scholarship became a reality on Dec. 28, 2006; the first scholarship recipient began classes in fall 2007. As an "endowed scholarship," interest from the initial investment will be used to fund the scholarship, and the principal will perpetuate the scholarship indefinitely. It is both a "need-based" and "merit-based" full scholarship providing tuition, room, board, books and supplies for a minority student from central Virginia. A committee will monitor recipient performance to provide every opportunity for success.

Centennial Scholars must maintain a certain GPA, must participate in at least one sponsored organization and must attend biweekly meetings to report their status and receive counseling or tutoring when necessary. This scholarship provides recipients the opportunity to achieve many personal goals.

Our personal goals for the scholarship

- Help minority students who have demonstrated the ability to achieve academically to attend college when they financially could not have afforded to do so
- Support JMU's commitment to be more diverse and to help its students to become involved and enlightened citizens who are prepared to solve the problems of society
- Honor the people and the relationships we value at JMU during the Centennial Celebration
- Honor the Riley family name

The POWER of GIVING

BY THE NUMBERS

The College of Integrated Science and Technology's first endowed chair was funded by the late Alvin and Nancy Baird ('39), who also established the Alvin V. Baird Attention and Learning Disabilities Center at JMU in 2000 with a $1.5 million gift, at that time the largest-ever private gift to the university.

8,023

JMU donors in 2006-07.

2007

The Gilliam Center for Ethical Business Leadership in the JMU College of Business opened in 2007. The gift, which raises the bar for CoB majors, is funded by an endowment from Richard and Leslie Flanary ('82) Gilliam.

45

New endowments created in 2006-07 by donors for scholarships, professorships, student awards, and academic and athletics programs.

$1,000,000

A $1,000,000 gift by Jeff Tickle ('90), establishing the Tickle Family Endowment for the College of Science and Mathematics, allows Tickle to share his passion for math and science with students. Tickle left an executive position to become a teacher for the same reason.

$12,245,643

JMU alumni, parents, friends, employees, corporations, foundations and others gave more than $12 million in private gifts in 2006-07.
