

what you can do

Students have a number of available options for getting involved in helping the global mine action community. Below are some examples of programs in which students can participate!

Adopt-A-Minefield and Landmine Survivors Network have joined forces to create “That Landmine Thing.” This campaign was created for and by students and involves thousands of young people from across North America interested in mine action. Their efforts help clear minefields, assist survivors, and raise awareness about the mine problem. Since it began, the campaign has involved over 1,000 schools and raised over $300,000.

To register your school, e-mail info@thatlandminething.org.

This year, Clear Path International has two Grassroots Fundraising Appeals you can support:

AbilityTrek An amputee cyclist from North Carolina is going to ride his bike around the world to raise funds and awareness of the landmine and unexploded ordnance (UXO) issue. This grassroots effort will involve pledging money per mile for the rider—if a student or student group raises just a penny per mile, it would total $130 at the end of his race. Students can learn about the issue, geography, and the human toll of landmines and UXO while raising funds for this cause.

Matching Grant CPI currently has a matching grant from the U.S. Department of State to raise civil society support for mine action. It is encouraging people to raise funds that can be matched to assist landmine and UXO victims.

For more information, contact info@cpa.org.

Freedom Fields USA has designed the Landmine Awareness Education Program. Students learn about the global landmine problem and ways to help solve it. They are challenged to think beyond their own lives and to become responsible, active global citizens. This informative packet is for teachers in elementary, middle, and high schools. It includes an educational DVD, a world landmine map, classroom activities and a list of resources. For those interested, we also have “Change For Children,” an in-school fundraising program.

Contact Freedom Fields at cathleen@freedomfieldsusa.org or (831) 644-6154 to request materials.

Landmine survivors in Cambodia are among the poorest in a very poor country. For many, access to basic human needs like shelter, food, water, health and education is blocked by the presence of landmines. Because of this, Landmines Blow! has created Project Safe Water. Here’s how you can get involved in this project:

- Organize a fundraising event, such as a car wash, rummage sale, raffle, bake sale, plant sale, or benefit concert.
- Have us speak at your school, park district, local club, or church.
- Join the Landmines Blow! Volunteer Task Force.
- Start a letter-writing campaign.
- Think outside the box!

Contact us via www.landminesblow.org for more information.

U.K. charity Mines Advisory Group and its partner, MAG America clear landmines, unexploded ordnance, and other weapons that threaten millions worldwide. It costs MAG $3.00 on average to clear one square meter of land. This clearance allows people to return to their homes, grow food, walk to school, and rebuild their lives in safety.

The Challenge: Clear Your Classroom! Figure out how many square meters your classroom is and raise enough money to clear it. Last year, Maret Middle School in Washington, D.C., held a talent show to benefit MAG. They raised an impressive $1,000, which can help clear over 330 square meters of land.

For more information, contact Jennifer Lachman at (202) 250-3914 or jennifer.lachman@magamerica.org.

CHAMPS (Children Against Mines Program) is a project of The Marshall Legacy Institute. This educational outreach program teaches students and communities about how landmines affect people and animals in war-torn nations. The project highlights the work of mine-detecting dogs, who are trained to “sniff out” landmines. This program allows students to:

- Help children in another country through giving and sharing
- Gain a greater understanding of their role in the global community

- Take part in a unique project to meet community service requirements
- Develop leadership skills
- Increase their awareness about an important international issue

For more information, contact Kimberly McCasland at kmccasland@marshall-legacy.org.

The Global Landmine Initiative is one of People to People International's high priorities. Recently, its efforts have focused on Sri Lanka. PTPI assistance supports a demining team, plus education and aftercare for mine survivors. Following the tsunami of December 2004, efforts expanded to build three schools. PTPI Student and Adult Chapters have embraced this effort through fundraisers to raise awareness and donations, as well as a Landmine Awareness Festival. Here’s how you can help:

- Join or create a PTPI Student Chapter to enhance educational, cultural and humanitarian activities.
- Coordinate special events at your school to raise awareness and funds.
- Join PTPI educational and humanitarian forums to raise awareness for this and other global humanitarian needs.
- Donate to PTPI’s International Friendship Fund—100% of donations go to the relief effort of your choice.
- Speak out! When you see the need, take action!

For more information, visit www.ptpi.org or write ptpi@ptpi.org.

The Roots of Peace Penny Campaign inspires students to raise awareness and funds for mine action. Students collect pennies to change minefields into safe schools and playgrounds for kids in war-torn countries. ABC 7/KGO news anchor Cheryl Jennings, Roots of Peace Founder Heidi Kuhn, and her daughter Kyleigh Kuhn co-founded the program. The Campaign has raised an amazing 10 million pennies since it began! Every penny counts as 100% of funds raised go directly to programs to help kids in Afghanistan and other mine-affected countries.

For more information, call Roots of Peace at (415) 455-8008 or visit www.rootsofpeace.org.

global landmine problem:

an opportunity for students and educators to help resolve it

Abandoned landmines and explosive remnants of war have left humankind with a deadly legacy. This post-conflict debris affects at least 60 countries, and kills or injures thousands of innocent civilians each year. Persistent landmines keep people from leading normal, productive lives. They hinder agriculture and economic growth, and they hurt the creation of lasting peace and stability in areas ruined by armed conflict. This situation can change, however, through the combined efforts of governments and private citizens.

“Humanitarian mine action” is the field that involves reducing the social, economic and environmental effects of mines and unexploded ordnance (UXO) such as bombs, grenades, etc. Mine action is not just about removing mines and destroying UXO. It is also about people and societies and how landmines affect them. The goal of mine action is to deal with victims’ needs and reduce the risk posed by landmines.

Mine clearance helps people live safely and lets economic and social development occur more freely. Mine action is a central part of any broad effort to rebuild countries and heal the wounds of war.

Between 1992 and 2002 alone, governments contributed over $1.7 billion to the cause of mine action. The total U.S. contribution surpassed $1 billion in 2005. These official efforts have resulted in significant reductions in casualties and a substantial return of mined land to safe, productive use. Yet governments alone cannot solve the numerous complex challenges presented by the landmine threat. Just as there are many challenges to be met, there are many ways to support landmine action.

Our nation’s youth have a huge capacity for contributing to mine action. Thus, one of the greatest ways to make a difference on this issue is to educate young people. Help them start programs in local schools, churches or neighborhoods. Students can carry out projects that raise awareness in their community and persuade others to become involved. Such projects encourage them to develop critical thinking and leadership skills, creativity, teamwork, and community service. They can work with local civic groups to raise money or other contributions that are vitally needed. Raising funds for others is true service learning because it requires students learn about the issue and make a real difference in the form of financial support.

This packet outlines just a few of the many paths you may choose when deciding how to focus your energy and skills on the global landmine problem. Whatever your course of action, we applaud you for deciding to inform yourself and get involved! Please keep reading for further information to help you learn more about the landmine issue and how students can employ service learning to make a difference in the world of mine action.

Did you know?

The UN General Assembly declared April 4, 2006, the first annual International Day for Mine Awareness and Assistance in Mine Action. The day is commemorated around the world to raise awareness about landmines and progress toward their eradication. Last year, people and organizations in at least 30 countries held events to observe it, according to the United Nations. This day is a great opportunity for students to host mine action activities in their schools and communities or even just to take time to learn more about the landmine issue.

If you decide to host an event for International Mine Action Day, please e-mail us the details at maic@jmu.edu.
